2015 Complementary Veterinary Medicine Conference: East meets West

» Have you always wondered about traditional Chinese veterinary medicine (TCVM)?
» Have you ever thought “there must be something else I can do for this patient”?
» Would you like to make some changes to the same old, same old?

It may be the Year of the Sheep but plan to get ahead of the flock. Acupuncture including herbal, conventional, traditional Chinese veterinary medicine (TCVM) or channel diagnosis; moxibustion, tui-na, herbal medicine, and qigong or daoyin. Explore these treatment modalities, add quality of life to your patients and expand treatment options for your clients.

This conference will appeal to those who are conscious of the increasing public interest in complementary or alternative diagnostics and treatment, and want to increase their knowledge base and expand their treatment options in a practical achievable manner. It will appeal to veterinary surgeons and nurses wanting to offer more treatment options to reflect the increasing emphasis on wellness as opposed to ‘fire brigade’ ‘bottom of the cliff’ practices.

By the end of this weekend seminar, the astute student should feel confident in their diagnostic approach and treatment protocols for their beloved companion animals and have greater skills in their human medical practice as well.

International speaker Dr Bruce Ferguson DVM, MS. President of the American Association of TCVM and Vice-president of the World Association of TCVM.

CPD points Activities in this course can be recorded under either continuing veterinary education or collegial learning.

24–26 October, Macy’s Motor Inn, Tauranga

NZVA members:
Three days Earlybird $865* Full rate $915
Non-members:
Three days Earlybird $1295* Full rate $1345
Recent graduates:
Three days Earlybird $610* Full rate $660
Nurses/students:
Two days Earlybird $405* Full rate $455

* Earlybird rates apply until 30 September. Two day registrations are available, please see registration form for more details.
 Day one and two only

Find out more and register online at www.nzva.org.nz/2015cvm